Roswell

Colonel Philip J. Corso's book "The Day After Roswell" details how, as Chief of Army's Foreign Technology Div. in 1961, he "seeded" the Roswell alien technology to giants of American industry. Note that when Col. Corso was questioned by one journalist about the number of craft that crashed in the incident, he held up three fingers.

M. Sgt. Frank Kaufman, in his first filmed interview, describes tracking one Roswell craft and explosion on radar, finding the wreckage and discovering five ET bodies. Also shown are his contemporaneous sketches of the craft and bodies.

Jim Ragsdale, in a video shot in hospital five days before his death in July 1995, describes how a second craft almost crashed on top of him and his girlfriend at a different location near Boy Scout Mountain, and how he entered the craft and inspected four dead ET bodies and the craft's interior.

The federal government created 6,620,154 secrets in 1997, according to the most recent audit of federal security operations.

Many of those are scientific secrets, but less than 1.5% actually involved the kind of atomic secrets considered crucial to national defense, several experts said.

In addition, there are 5,002 secret inventions registered with the U.S. Patent Office--devices considered so critical to national security that their very nature must be withheld from the public.

♦ Los Angeles Times 1999

Note: A CSETI source advises that these "critical secrets" are probably secrets that have been stolen from the legitimate patent holders.
